Racial Demographics

The town of Milford, Delaware, is a hub for much of the county's growth. "Best Places to Live" gives the area a 7.4/10 on its "Comfort Index." It is a great place to live and raise a family. It has a quaint central core for the population of 12,000, but most of the recent growth for the hub is located along the highways radiating from the core. In these corridors are found typical suburban developments, stores, banks, offices, and fast-food chains. What Milford does not have is a Christ-centered, outreach-oriented, Reformed and Presbyterian Church. The closest one is 20 miles and 30 minutes away.

Additionally, in 2019 cataclysmic change came to the area when Bayhealth opened a 242 bed, $300,000,000 regional medical campus just outside of town and began the renovation of its old in-town hospital for use as a nursing home. The new hospital is a regional teaching hospital that provides every imaginable form of health care. This monumental investment in what was once a sleepy, out-of-the-way place, has brought every kind of health care professional and medical support staff. It is also drawing non-medical businesses of every type and the workers to staff them.

These people, uprooted for the most part from communities far away, will need places where they can be nurtured in faith and worship according to the dictates of their consciences. The unbelievers among the transplants deserve a strong outwardly focused gospel witness in their midst. Heritage Presbytery and Faith Presbyterian, Wilmington, Delaware, are committed to seeing a PCA church planted that will meet these needs.
